What You Should Know About Divorce and Your Credit Score

As you may know, going through divorce can jumble up your finances, but did you know it might affect your credit score? If you have any joint accounts that incurred a debt like credit cards or a loan, you are equally responsible for repayment of those debts – and failure to do so by either party can ruin both of your credit scores.

Does it matter if the other driver did not have a valid driver's license?

The fact that the other driver was operating a vehicle without a valid license can be a very important piece of evidence in your car accident injury claim. The fact that they do not have a valid license could further illustrate their negligence, especially if their license was suspended or revoked due to driving misconduct. There's also an additional level of negligence if the driver was never licensed in the first place.

Changing Spousal Support When Ex Loses His or Her Job

Spousal support agreements are not iron-clad arrangements and they may change as your or your ex's circumstances change. If your ex loses his or her job, he or she may be able to petition for a reduction in the full alimony amount you are receiving.
